FFRF's First Billboard in Missouri!

A resident of Manchester, Mo., in suburban St. Louis, poses by FFRF's "Imagine No Religion" billboard, placed at the end of August for a month at 14030 Manchester Road/Weidman Road, with the help of three local members.

This quote from Mark Twain is one of two messages running on 75 buses in San Francisco. For story, see front page.

Indianapolis Asked to "Imagine No Religion"

This 14x48-foot billboard went up on Sept. 11 at Keystone Avenue North, near 52nd St., Indianapolis, for a month. A generous Indiana donor made the display possible. This is FFRF's first foray into billboards in Indiana. It has now placed billboards in about 30 cities and 20 states, with 30 more states to go! FFRF takes billboards where local members act as scouts, and/or contribute to the tax-deductible billboard fund. Photo: Marcia Gascho

FFRF at Bobfest

The activist event is named for Wisconsin Progressive Robert M. "Fighting Bob" La Follette, who served as Wisconsin governor, then became a U.S. senator. He was a proponent of "The Wisconsin Idea," the belief that education should influence people's lives beyond the boundaries of the classroom and forged alliances between government and the University of Wisconsin. In 1909, he founded La Follette's Magazine, now The Progressive. He and his wife, Belle Case La Follette, promoted woman suffrage and civil rights and opposed war and child labor. La Follette was a keen admirer of the freethinker Robert G. Ingersoll. Photo: Bev Skelton
